I have a state with some numbers and also an object. When the user selects an item in a list the state changes and the object in the state gets modified. I want to change the state based on the changes to this object. Currently I am passing both the selected item and the object which is in the state to the reducer. This works but I don't want the reducer to know about the object, only about the new value of the number. The object is too big, around 10 lines of code, and the whole thing is not very DRY (Dynamic) so I'd like to avoid passing it. const nums = [1,2,3] function reducer(state, action) { switch (action.type) { case 'SELECT':
