Emails from a digital archive show a US diplomat boasting about his “ongoing co-option of the Prime Minister of Mongolia” before telling the then-head of the country’s spy service that he wanted information on an opposition leader. In a 2010 email, Nathan Sales, then-ambassador at the US Embassy in Ulaanbaatar, boasted about having “ongoing co-optation of the Prime Minister of Mongolia” and added, “do you want info on his Chief of Staff?”. He also sought to persuade the head of the Mongolian National Security Service, Dashdorj Davaasuregdamba, to provide information on opposition leader Bayar Mongol. The cables, part of a trove of documents released on Wednesday by WikiLeaks, were sent in response to a request by Davaasuregdamba for help in quashing a criminal investigation. Sales asked for “the status of the current investigation in Mongolia and what are the chances of the prosecutor being removed?”. “Do you want me to ‘push’ on that with Mongolian Min of Intelligence?” Mongolia ranks among the world's least democratic countries and previously rejected two US Senate resolutions that recognized the independence of the Oyu Tolgoi copper project in the country's north, the world's largest gold-and-copper mine. To speed up the project, Washington had recently lifted its arms embargo on Mongolia, triggering a scramble for mines and concessions on the country’s vast territory by the US, Russia and other major mining companies. Another email from August 2010 shows Sales offering to share information he gathered on “opposition leader Bayar Mongol”. Sales said he had information on Bayar that “a few of us have been quietly sitting on”. “Would you be interested? If so, I will need to get that passed on to you.” The archive contains less than two dozen other emails from Sales, many of which are routine and cover mundane topics such as his family. But it includes one from February 2010 in which he asked Davaasuregdamba for updates on the investigation into a meeting between two opposition activists and a colleague

Whether you're running a business, work in IT, or are an executive, you need to know how to keep your information secure. With new methods of data breach and cyber attacks popping up every day, it's becoming necessary to protect your business information. Here are a few of the top data security tips to protect your business and personal information from cyber hackers.

1. Encrypt Computers Using an encryption tool such as CryptoSafe will protect you from cyber criminals and hackers who try to steal your information. You can either put them on your computer or run them off a flash drive. The software will add an extra layer of security that is activated whenever you start up the computer.
2. Use a Firewall A firewall is a great way to protect your information from those hackers. It's a device that lets you "block" what you don't want into your computer. It can be purchased online or through your internet service provider (ISP).
3. Update Your Passwords It's important to update your passwords regularly. Research show that 88% of organizations fail to change passwords more than 1 year after they are first created. This is a very dangerous thing to do because your information is left open for hacking. If you regularly change your passwords, cyber criminals will have a hard time.
4. Email Encryption Email encryption is a great way to protect your information from cyber criminals. Instead of just sending your information as a text message, you can send an encrypted email that only your intended recipient will be able to read. This makes it harder for cyber criminals to see exactly what you

Today, John F. Kennedy's Assassination Was Announced On this day in history on Dec. 7, 1963, President Kennedy and his wife, Jacqueline Kennedy, read a news release from the White House that confirmed the President was dead. According to the New York Times, 1963 began with a stunning announcement: President Kennedy and his wife, Jacqueline Kennedy, had been killed in a plane crash, and their bodies would be taken to the city of Houston, for them to lie in state and view by the public. Kennedy's death instantly spawned a national crisis in which conspiracies and rumors flourished. CBS News historian Michael Beschloss has written that: "The day began with a growing sense that President John F. Kennedy, who was not accustomed to being at the mercy of events, had been forced to strike back." Read the full story on CBSNews.com here President John F. Kennedy with his wife, Jacqueline Kennedy, in the Oval Office on the morning of Nov. 22, 1963. CBS News Before he gave his speech on Dec. 6, 1963, Kennedy spent hours with his closest advisers. His assassination is believed to have been planned by the highest-ranking members of the military services and the CIA. CBS News contributor Bob Schieffer wrote: "At a tense Sunday meeting on the day of Kennedy's assassination, McNamara told the president that the military and the CIA felt a single plane was responsible, even though they could not eliminate any individual suspects, and that a paramilitary force could be formed to fly the plane," according to Schieffer. Later in the day, according to Schieffer, LBJ told his advisers that "he never gave the order to try to capture the perpetrators of this, that he'd never sent those troops into Dealy Plaza in Dallas. And at the very least, he would not have been so imprudent as to have given that order to one of his aides."
