Kong, “There was no press conference, that was just a question-and-answer session with the Chinese Ambassador.” Hong Kong police initially hoped to bring three men to face the murder of a 15-year-old girl, but the FBI only asked the Chinese ambassador for a translation. One of the suspects being sought in the attack was a man of African descent. Kortan, in an interview with NBC News’ Andrea Mitchell, then said that the Chinese government saw FBI Special Agent Diana Waters “as a huge threat.” “Our view is that [Waters] was a rogue officer and she made some very bad decisions,” Kortan said. “But we never imagined that she would be taking her personal views about race and the Chinese government and be involved in human rights abuses around the world, which is the way it has played out.” Read: A police officer in Hong Kong says he was targeted by the FBI because he was Black. Mitchell asked Kortan why the FBI’s press release on the case did not mention that Waters had been asked to resign. “Our concern is that to drag somebody through the mud would cloud the investigation and may have a chilling effect on potential witnesses,” Kortan replied. Kortan’s account of what took place in Hong Kong shows that there is no attempt to cover-up the FBI’s role in what appears to be an
