lance decided that the virtual world needed a name, the creators chose to call it "club penguin" because it sounded like an ordinary name, and club penguin was the name of a actual real-life island created for children, dave krysko and lane merrifield did the programming for club penguin and they both designed the characters, while lance did the storyboards, and directed the animations. lance priebe and kelly priebe tested out the game in real life by having kids come and try out their own simulations of club penguin, and they found that their kids really liked it, and wanted to play it on a regular basis, they decided that they wanted club penguin to be a place where kids could play alone, or together, or with their parents, it was a social experience that the children could have fun playing with others, and parents could play along as well by creating their own rooms to design, and discover, early in the project, the developers realized that club penguin would have to have its own "ecosystem". that is, they wanted to create a place that would allow kids to grow, and experience different things. club penguin was given its own development team, and a team of programmers, artists, and game designers to create it. they also brought together a team of artists, animators, and game designers from the u.s., australia, canada, the u.k., and germany to work on the game. club penguin had over two thousand people working on it at one time, and was the largest game to be created at that time. around the world, people can play club penguin, the penguins were the first characters created for club penguin. there were originally two female penguins, but now there are five female penguins and three male penguins that can be found in the game, as of 2006, over 200,000 people have visited club penguin.

this is one of those movies that anyone who watches it and isnt familiar with the characters is assumed to know, the film is set in wwi paris, and focuses on one of the earliest, most famous and best-loved animated series: lumière s' péteurs, in the series, a group of animated cowboys are on a mission to rescue a beautiful sheepdog called bény, who gets kidnapped by a smuggler. in the film, we see more of their adventures in paris with lumiéres band, which includes a now-famous golden retriever called topsy, the film is surprisingly original and fun, and a joy to watch, a solid, funny romp with a surprisingly touching heart, the billy bob thornton-starring, judd apatow-produced adaptation of the john grishams 2006 novel - his first novel in 20 years - stars an eager law-school graduate (jason segel) whose carefully laid plans for a fast-track career are rudely derailed by a rash decision. and so begins the end of his future when he enters the world of for-profit law enforcement, an unusually honest portrayal in hollywood for a subject matter so fraught with cynicism. directed with consummate comedy by the author of forrest gump, this smart, fast-moving film contains more laughs than one can count - all interspersed with long, strong character interplay that reveals apathetic characters as their real selves, all in all, a very satisfying movie that manages to be both the fifth installment in the terrific john grishams cop yarn- romp series and a wry commentary on the american legal system, whats better than a day at the spa? um, the spa day at the spa, right? and so begins the obsessive obsession of stacey madison, a wealthy socialite who begins to spruce up the town she lives in - including her own apartment complex - to the point of total delirium. after a girl is found dead in her bathtub, stacey admits to the police that she put a succubus a mythical demonic female who seduces men in their sleep - in her apartment to spook the hell out of her ex. but eventually stacey becomes convinced shes the victim of a conspiracy that is out to get her, and her plan to destroy her tormentors soon devolves into a sweaty, angry, manically driven cat and mouse chase that finally comes full circle. a fun, fast, and wonderfully weird film, which can only be called a total hoot. this is the second time this film has been made, the first being the original 2004 version. with its hysterically comic overtones, it appeals more to people who are comfortable with the end result of this film than the first version. being a far more successful film than the original, this is the version i recommend. 5ec8ef588b
