While in the movie Gita Cinta, Galih was a regular student at the SMA that popularized the philosophy Sekolah Diharap (a special school that teaches students to be independent and responsible in life). Although Ratna is also a senior high school student, it seems as though she has not yet learned how to act on her own. In The Night Comes for Us, Ratna has been kicked out of her school because her teachers considered her to be a terrible student. But in the movie, Ratna is determined to become a better student by herself. She soon finds herself working at a café run by Galih, who is living alone in an apartment. Eventually, Ratna and Galih fall in love and start a relationship. The movie also features music from Indonesian rock band Irama, most notably Kesempatan and Lele. Although the plot is fictional and the music used in the film is fictional, it's always good to hear their music for inspiration to make their own songs. Although Ratna and Galih's relationship is just an ordinary teenage romance, the movie doesn't shy away from tackling some serious social issues. One of the most controversial scenes is the scene where Ratna drinks a lot of alcohol. This scene was censored at the Netherlands' cinema where the film was released, after complaints over the depiction of alcohol. Ratna goes to investigate the music store of her father. While there, she hears Galih's tape of Sakura playing on his Walkman. After the song is over, Ratna imagines Galih visiting the store, while the lights of the store gradually fade. The movie ends with the couple putting back the cassette in the Walkman.
