you may notice that the speech recognition used in speechnotes is a bit limited. it is probably because the microphone used is not the best option. luckily, a microphone can be replaced by a headset or an external microphone. the microphone used by speechnotes is similar to what is available in smartphones, it is an on-board microphone. when you open a word document you may choose to use the templates that come with office, or you may create your own templates. the templates that come with office were most likely used by the creator, so they may be out of date and not always provide the best template for your needs. creating your own templates is easy. with a blank template, you can start to create a new document. choose to create a new blank document. pick a layout. layout includes main and sub layout. you can make your template used to multiple documents, or you can pick a template that will be used to open new documents, but will not be saved into the template file. choose main page, sub page, or other options. sps-pm pre-operation: connect a high-quality microphone to your pc (if you have a built-in microphone it might be good enough). operation: 1) click the mic 2) for the first time only: your browser will popup a request for you to allow the site to listen to your mic. click allow. 3) start dictating. speak slowly and clearly. space your words and emphasize correct diction for better results. 4) intermediate results will show in the buffer. there are 3 ways to finalize and shift transcription results from the buffer to the text editor itself: (a) press enter key on the keyboard (b) say or click on a punctuation mark (c) wait troubleshooting: most common causes for failures are: 1) hardware problem with the microphone 2) browser not chrome 3) permission to listen not granted 4) chrome listens to the wrong microphone to fix the last 2 problems, you should click on the small camera icon in the browser's address bar (will appear after you click the mic) and there set the permission to allow speechnotes and pick the correct microphone from the drop-down list. although we try, speech results might not be accurate. also, speechnotes is a service provided as-is and we cannot guarantee that it will continue in the future. for that reason, and for the small chance that software failures might happen, we suggest you export your important texts either to google drive or to your computer, so to be protected against unexpected data loss. we will not be responsible for data loss or inaccuracies.
