and the other great source of misery is the great cities, where every man lives in misery and dirt, where all his faculties are stunted, and where a hundred diseases attack him, and m a hundred thousand accidents and m a hundred thousand injuries of one sort and another devour up his life. these are the centres of misery, and wherever their influence reaches, the misery is increased. there is no place in these crowded cities where one may live free from the m of one of these evils. the reason is that, in order to live, we must pay the penalty of capital. the more we consume of the products of labor, and the less we produce of them, the greater our payment. if we consume all the products of labor of the country, we pay in taxes for the support of the state, and we pay nothing. but if we work all our lives, we pay our own way. no man will work if he can not earn his living. but no man can earn his living if he must work, and if there are not enough productive laborers to employ all those who would work. to create a large and fertile field of labor, it is necessary to find a large and fertile field of capital. to make a great city it is necessary to find a great quantity of fertile land and a great extent of fertile land. and the greater the supply of capital, the more fertile the land must be. to make a great city is to make a great and fertile field of capital. the capitalist must have a great number of workers, or he will not produce, and the workers must have a great deal of capital or they will not produce. but if there are not enough productive laborers, there is no great supply of capital, and so no great city. all these great cities of to-day are great cities of capital. they are all cities of property; and the misery and filth and disease they contain is the tribute of property to the human race. the men, women, and children of these great cities are slaves, and their masters are the capitalists. their own misery and disease and filth, and the accidents and crimes which invade them from the surrounding country, are the signs of property, and the children of the rich have the right to be brought up in luxury and comfort and abundance, while the children of the poor have to be brought up in hardship and poverty. but all this is not what we wish to see abolished. the capitalists are the source of wealth. they are the source of human happiness. we are the enemies of the capitalists. if they do not work, we must work; and if they work, they must work. and the only condition in which the workers will enjoy life is a condition of competition, of anarchy, and of struggle. it is only when there is a great flow of capital over the country, and when it is divided among all the producers of wealth, that the laborers can obtain such a share of the products of their labor as will enable them to enjoy life. and this is the greatest blessing. there is no other source of human happiness, and of the wealth which forms the source of happiness, than the division of labor and the competition of production. this is the true reason why we believe there is no other source of wealth than the division of labor and the competition of production, and why we believe that this division and this competition are the greatest of all blessings. the greater the division of labor, the more the products of labor are multiplied. the more the products of labor are multiplied, the greater the division of labor, and the greater the division of labor, the more abundant are the results of human labor. 5ec8ef588b
