Walmart is starting a new category of underwear — two-piece underwear — that will be sold at checkout counters across the country. The new underwear will have pockets and a fold-over front panel, and will be sold under the No. 3 brand at the retailer, according to a statement from a Walmart spokesperson. Walmart is not releasing the brand name and will be launching the collection nationwide this quarter. "We are confident that customers will welcome the new style of underwear as it's more flattering and offers style, function and protection," said Walmart spokeswoman Molly Blakeman. At a news conference Monday in San Francisco, Blakeman said the retailer is trying to offer options for men who tend to wear the same items to work and at home. "We see that [two-piece] as a more natural style," Blakeman said. Many of the company's offerings for men have been boxers and shorts, which get stacked on clothes hangers in the men's department. Other women's brands with options that meet that standard include the popular Old Navy brand. In addition to expanding the size of its existing underwear line, Walmart is also offering a
