Leave a Reply About Us Global Freed is the no.1 advertising portal available online to easily reach worldwide customers. It is a free classified website with a wide range of visitors in internet. A site which has policy based marketing in mind Who makes money from advertising on this site should just be users which includes creators of this site. We are based on LA LA LOOP ADVERTISING technology which we acquired GIANT ADVERTISING NETWORK LLC. Well it appears that I managed to get a bit lost along the way at some point and took a wrong turning somewhere. The way I figure is that after a rather messy update on solvable types that the program started to work in a different mode and took a break. Around the end of last year I got completely hooked on trying to create solvable constraint types and LTSs and played with them for a bit. Then I started to allow mappings between solvable types and generic types and the program just seems to have come to a grinding halt. I don't seem to be able to find a way to dig the program out of its current cul de sac. That said I've spent the last week doing various other things and I've got something that I can use. It's a bit of a mess right now but it works in the sense that it appears to do what I asked it to do. I'll comment as I go along. Firstly I added the ability to show the data context at the top of the editor window, much the way that it's done with the constraint types. It appears that it's already been done a little in the former version of datacontract but I've probably missed something and it's much more convenient to see it at the top. It appears that the utility datacontract is still part of the base, though it's not mentioned in the documentation. I made some changes to get it to work like I want, though there is much more that I want. So I'm doing some consolidating in that area. There are various versions floating around that have come and gone during the project's lifetime. I don't really know what's going on with them, so I'm just making use of what seems to be the most recent one. The one I've got has some problems with nullable ref types and type constraints.
